

submitted with the application. Whilst the illustrative masterplan would not have the status of a 'approved plan' under any planning permission (since it was submitted for illustrative purposes only), it does indicate that the maximum 2,745 homes is not an unreasonable assumption, subject to detailed design and amenity testing. However, in line with the normal provisions of an outline application and Environmental Statement, the application also includes a minimum scenario, which sets out the lowest quantum of development which would be permissible under the outline application. In terms of housing, this is stated to be 1,700 new homes. It is therefore necessary to assess whether this minimum scenario would also deliver the policy requirements in terms of new housing and affordable housing. An indicative dwelling mix and tenure split is set out in the development specification which is summarised in Tables 11 and 12.

Aylesbury Estate – Housing baseline (May 2008).

89. Whilst the estate originally comprised entirely social rented accommodation, over time a number of units have been purchased by tenants through the 'right to buy' scheme. The Mayor of London's Housing SPG clarifies that the 'right to buy' properties should not be included within the affordable housing baseline for the estate. The housing baseline is set out in the table below and is taken from May 2008 before regeneration commenced and dwellings were demolished.

Table 8: Aylesbury Estate housing baseline (May 2008)

Unit type	Social Rent	Leasehold	Totals

Aylesbury Estate – early redevelopment phases

90. Since the 2008 baseline, a number of early phases of the estate redevelopment have taken (or are taking) place –these are known as 'site 1a' and 'site 7' (see planning history). The cumulative housing contribution of these early redevelopments is as set out in the table below:
